

Soap Bubble
The art of Balance

" A building is like a soap bubble. The bubble is perfect and harmonious if the breadth has been evenly distributed from the inside. The exterior is the result of an interior " - Le Corbusier, Towards a new architecture

In Anand Parbat, Le Corbusier's soap bubble has exploded. The facade manifests in surface the effect of massive inner pressure on the house due to maximised domestic space. Formally, this is interpreted as an array of columns with brick infills, which nests within a second language of windows - arches demarcating the private interior and long windows marking the exterior. (Elevation impression for Cattle type cluster)

